Portland Street Response was already funded for 24/7 expansion by last March, 2023, and City Hall has not been transparent about where that funding has been redirected. Now they are proposing a $3 million cut, and Commissioner Gonzalez's failure to secure medicaid funding means PSR is now facing an 80% cut

There should be stable funding and take it out of the political discourse as this exists to create community safety, alleviate the police's responsibility and their complaints that they weren't trained for this, and create a pathway for help for people. It is outrageous that it's become a pawn in the game of city, police, and budget arguments.

It is extremely difficult to trust anything our city council or mayor says because they do not ACT. They say they want this program then don't help support the program or help with mis-information being spread about the program, we have one city council member who is not helping the program, and is actively limiting it but none of their peers in city council or the Mayor are stepping up. You SAY they care, but what is their plan to ACT?

Looking at the other models cities across the country have in place, PSR should be able to exist as its own response option... in the same way police, fire, and Ems are options. PSR does not need to, nor should it, exist to make things better for police or fire. It serves a need that is currently unmet.

Thanks for holding this town hall! PCCEP of course exists as the result of the Portland Police Bureau's DOJ Civil Rights Division settlement agreement regarding a pattern of unconstitutional use of force by PPB against individuals with mental illness. The City/PPB remains out of compliance with the agreement made in 2014. The settlement agreement also mandates an effective unarmed 911 response option to assist those experiencing a behavioral or mental health crisis, which is what Portland Street Response provides.

Is that the question at hand? Mental health support is a systemic issue - addressing it at the street level is one component of it, but as it relates to PSR the question is more about what resource you want to show up if a mental health issue is what's taking place.

- Friends of PSR (19:03:01):
PSR is limited in what kinds of 911 calls it can respond to due to opposition from the Portland Police Association. They have unfortunately opposed PSR since it was first implemented, but both Chief Outlaw and Chief Lovell have been strong supporters of PSR. Police Chiefs across the country know police are not the best first responder to all 911 calls.

Yes, AMR isn't the model I'm suggesting. I'm just so over local government continually finding ways to undermine PSR, while telling us they "support" PSR. I'd like PSR not to be dependent upon the political whims of local government.

Lives are precious, and should not be caught in the crosshairs of whichever way the political winds blow in Portland. I'm not sure to whom PSR would be accountable if it had the federal matching money.

- Thomas Rogers (19:24:37):
Here to drop a comment in the chat and then need to go back to work.
I think we need 24/7 coverage and the funding to expand services at that level. This is a humanitarian crisis, PSR is the most effective, proven investment vehicle we have to save lives, and we need to budget in a way that matches the urgency our community feels on this issue.
Also, the police work slowdown needs to end. We need a combination of carrots and sticks to get PPB back to workgoing after dealers and other root causes of the supply of addiction. Decrim or recrim doesn't make a difference if police let fent dealers go. Funding PSR creates a competitor in keeping our community safer and healthier which we desperately need right now to create a contrast with the approach taken by our police.

- Kat Mahoney (19:26:58):
PPA raised that Portland Street Response would respond to calls for which police and fire have historically responded to and that would trample or step on their toes via labor laws and that after a union group has done certain work for years, then it is considered bargaining unit work. The original argument was that the City cannot have someone else do the work without bargaining it to an agreement. Since then, that was put tot the side but it'll keep a ceiling over PSR.

I'm home sick with COVID, just wanted to add my voice to the chorus of advocates begging City Hall to fully fund Portland Street Response, to give these employees the dignity and support they deserve to do the incredibly difficult work that they do. PSR needs to be expanded citywide, 24/7, with access to private residences for emergency mental health calls the way all other bureaus get access. They also need to have the ability to give out life saving materials reinstated.
- Odelia (she/her) Zuckerman (19:46:24):
  1. What are the core attributes of Portland Street Response that make them something that has such strong community support?
  2. In your view, what is needed to secure PSR's future as a sustainable and resilient program?
  3. Currently, Portland Street Response operates Citywide, from 8 AM-10 PM, 7 days a week. Do you support maintaining this coverage? If you'd like to see it change, what would you like to see?
  4. Currently, Portland Street Response can respond to mental health-related situations that occur outside (meaning not in a building), and do not involve a weapon. Do you support maintaining these restrictions? If not, how would you like to see them change?
